International news

Recent United Nations data reveals that worldwide migration has more than doubled over the past decade, as record numbers of people flee their countries to escape the effects of war, climate change and political persecution. As of the beginning of 2024 there are 120 million people displaced worldwide. (Source: Sky news)

The Portuguese government presented a new migration plan aimed at prioritising entry for young professionals, skilled labourers, and family reunifications, while tackling a backlog of over 400,000 cases. Also in Europe, Poland reintroduced an ‘exclusion zone’ along its border with Belarus, preventing ‘unauthorised people’ from travelling within 200 metres of the border. These measures were announced following the stabbing of a Polish border agent. (Sources: European Commission, Notes from Poland)

UK borders and migration policy

At least 79 people seeking asylum have been released on bail, after being detained as part of Home Office efforts to complete removals to Rwanda last month. Meanwhile, the Rwandan government have accused the UNHCR of ‘lying,’ after lawyers representing the international body told a British Court that there was new evidence that there is a real risk of refugees being relocated by Rwanda to countries where they are at serious risk. In other news, a group of people seeking asylum who were relocated to Rwanda by the UK have spoken about the lack of appropriate care available to meet their trauma-related needs, in Rwanda. The individuals were relocated via Diego Garcia Island, an overseas UK territory which has been holding a group of Tamil asylum seekers who arrived from Sri Lanka. (Sources: BBC News, Al Jazeera)

The High Court has found that the Home Office has acted unlawfully by failing to provide people with digital proof of status where they have made a valid, in-time application to renew their status and are able to remain in the UK under the same conditions until they receive a decision. The judge said that ‘Hostile Environment’ policies were wrongly being applied to people who had valid leave, with the case highlighting issues faced by people receiving disability benefits who were unable to continue to claim benefit. (Source: Free Movement)

On visas and migrant labour, a new briefing from the Migration Observatory looks at migrants and the labour market. One fifth of the labour force is made up on foreign born workers, with the IT, transport and hospitality sectors particularly dependent on migrant labour. Elsewhere, care home owners talk about the challenges they face without being able to recruit foreign care staff. (Sources: Migration Observatory, BBC News)
